
Street protests. Fiasco: “Feelings of distress exist in our society which do not involve violence”

Riots broke out at Piazza Montecitorio, seat of the Italian parliament, during a demonstration organised by shopkeepers and restaurateurs calling for the reopening of businesses, but protesters flooded Italian squares from North to South. Sociologist Maurizio Fiasco reflects on the country's current situation after a year of "forced cohabitation" with COVID-19.